Current developments in Europe involving the sanctification of borders, the categorisation of refugees and other displaced persons, and the arrivals arising from growing racial and right-wing populist movements and discourses – urgently required responses not only from politics and civil society, but also from peace and conflict studies. This conference aims to bring together different approaches in order to develop reflexive, critical, empirical and normative thought to both confront and probe our positions and practices as well as reflect on their location vis-à-vis the centers and margins of power. In addition, new developments urge us to re-examine and appropriate readings and alternatives to “Western” or “Westernized” thought and to in- vestigate Europe’s involvement in current economic and violent conflicts.

For their first joint conferences, the “Europäische Akademie Völkenrat (Protestant Academy); in cooperation with the German Association for Peace and Conflict Studies (AERF) and the European Peace Research Association (EUPRF); invites all inter- ested to present and discuss their academic work on the political challenges Europe is currently facing, while reflecting on the institution’s role and responsibilities in light of global power structures. Furthermore, this joint conference aims at fostering international cooperation between scholars of peace and con- flict studies from Europe and other continents.
